I wonder if that applies to attorneys too?

It would also be helpful for this Court to review the "scrapbooks" contained on <https://dalneitzel.com> particularly those after the Dizzy Dean story of June 2018.

This could go on for a long time if the court is expected to navigate Dal's website. Good luck with that.

QUESTION...

Can I sue myself for not finding the treasure?

And if "yes," do you know a good lawyer I could hire... besides Miss Anderson?

Note: Misspelled on purpose to protect this board =)

That's very hypocritical for her to be harassing Forrest and then saying "Fennatics" are harassing her. Pot calling the kettle black.

This is one good example of why no two searchers can agree on a single solve, the Chase has drawn in so many narcissists. Sour grapes and sore losers at their finest definitions.

Ms Anderson clearly reads forums and gets cross when people talk about her. But are we allowed to say that Fenn's best defence against her is to call a psychologist as an expert witness? He should find someone who's published a paper on the hobby of treasure hunting.

It would show, after extensive research, that 99% of people involved in the Fenn hunt think their solve is right, and would claim that without any objective evidence to back it up.

It would show that when any such solve is shown to independent, rational, observers 100% of those observers express doubts about the sense of the solve.

It would also show that 99% of searchers think Fenn's posts, emails, messages have words directed at them and/or their solve. And then prove that the same words will be seen as clear messages by people who read completely different meanings into the exact same words.

The expert witness would finally sum up and say that though Ms Anderson is clearly a smart woman, sadly the syndrome of treasurehuntingitis means that it's almost certain that she, like countless others, is bound to believe in a reality where her solve has to be right at all costs, to the extent that she would convince herself legal action is necessary.

Then I'd bring along 30 random searchers who swear their solve is right and that hers can't be, all equally unobjective about their solve ideas and who all admit they'd start a legal case if they had the opportunity.

Case dismissed.

1. The only YouTuber who is attacking her on a personal level is good ol' you know who, the dipwad that attacks everyone. but he can do that, because..

2. 6 or 7 years ago, the court ruled that social media cannot be held to the same standard as journalism. People who make fun of you on social media are not liable for their behavior, unless it can be proven that it causes the subject personal or financial harm. If it were true, for example, I could sue the short pants off of the sociopathic dumb bunny, Top Secret, for what little property he owns. <Making my point.

3. Reading public court documents on YouTube, then expressing your opinion of them is not harassment, and perfectly legal. The likelihood the court would agree to restrict the distribution of said documents, especially in this case, is slim to none. But, I expect that we've seen the last of any documents related to this case, other than the response to her most recent action by the court. Don't expect to see anything else from Fenn's attorneys. They can sit comfortably back and watch her shoot herself in the foot.

4. She was already in trouble with the court, for her poorly composed initial pleading/complaint, and was given 21 days to amend it. The court warned her that she could be sanctioned by the court if she continued to produce less than quality work.

5. This most recent pleading is, in my opinion, worse than the first, and does not address the corrections the court clearly identified in their response to her initial complaint.

Bottom line: The case will not make it past preliminary hearing, if the court doesn't simply dismiss it with prejudice and sanction her.

In any case, it will not be necessary for the YouTubers to "lawyer up." There is nothing any more illegal in their programming that is different from what anyone regularly has to deal with in this or any other forum.

Funny she does not mention her issues all started when she claimed her ex husband was harassing her. Is there a common theme to her stories ?

It is my understanding that she has reached out to Kpro to "talk" and Kpro refused and said she wouldn't have any private conversations with her. If she wanted to talk she would have to do it in front of all of us...yet she says YouTubers are harassing her.

I personally am hoping that she will soon be nominated and sit on the Supreme Court. Her motion to the court to seal the pleadings from the public because the court of public opinion has hurt her feelings is amazing. I could see her beginning a whole new era of law in our country, not based upon evidence or facts; but rather how a person feels and thinks and what your neighbors think of you. Maybe she'll run for public office if Trump doesn't nominator her at his first opportunity for the bench. Is it too late to get her on the ballot for November?

In the meantime, she might be working on her book "File Your Own Federal Law Suit (on the wrong jurisdiction) for Dummies" if

She could run for President some day. Certainly qualified it appears, based on our nation's standards for presidential qualification.

It's not really the searchers fault because the chase brings in a certain type of person who has a certain perception or personality and with the poem having so many possibilities not to mention all the SB's, emails from Forrest, videos, forums etc. it can help create the false belief that one has solved the poem correctly. Plus one needs a LOT of confidence in their solve to spend the money and time to have gone to look for it. It always reminds me of "American Idol" where they looked for a certain type of person to use, who thought or where told by their mischievous, so called bar friends, that they're a great singer only to be ridiculed later on in the show for having absolutely no singing talent.

Every time I hear about these frivolous lawsuits...

I'm reminded the tragic tale of Rogelio "Roger" Domingo Roxas.

The former Filipino soldier, who had struggled as a locksmith for many years to make ends meet for his family, before finally discovering a cave in north Manila... a hidden chamber full of gold bars and a giant golden Buddha statue (filled with uncut diamonds.) The cache was a portion of the legendary Yamashita treasure.

Yes, this was the find of a lifetime!

But unfortunately for Roger, president Marcos had other plans... and orchestrated a raid to confiscate everything. Years later, Roger died of mysterious causes, the night before his court date.

Here's the heartbreaking article (note: it's different from the one ran on the History Channel) -->
https://unsolvedmysteries.fandom.com...a%27s_Treasure

And my point in sharing is merely to remind you, that there will always be people like former president Marcos, waiting in the wings to

Well yes, and I blame Trump, indirectly, for the Chase having a forced patriotic ending.
